
Starting Off on the Right Foot with Collins Writing

Establishing routines up front saves time in the long run. We've compiled some of our tried-and-true strategies for setting students up for writing success and building an engaging writing culture in your classroom.

- Brush up on your Collins IQ by taking our QUICK QUIZ.
- Quickly review the Five Types of Writingsm with students as you use each one for the first time. Download our free mini-poster to use as a handout and post the Five Types of Writing in your classroom for easy reference.
- Use Collins language to simplify instructions and build consistent expectations.
- Communicate with parents about the Five Types of Writing. You can download our ready-to-use Letters to Parents on our Free Resources web page.
- Establish a system for using Type One and Type Two writing quickly and easily. Consider setting up student notebooks (digital or paper) that can be readily accessed when a quick-write opportunity arises!
- Focus your instructional goals. Preassess student writing needs, prioritize key skills and habits, and map out an attainable plan for the year. Check out Writing Roadmap for the tools that make this possible.
- For Type Three and Four writing, post an example of the model paper heading and consider using our downloadable, preformatted paper from our Free Resources web page to save time and keep students organized.
- Develop a system for collecting student writing samples to use as models throughout the year. Some teachers take photos of exemplary papers with their phones. Others make copies of papers that “need work” to use as instructional models in the classroom. Find a system that works for you and before you know it, you'll have a great bank of papers to pull from no matter what you're teaching!
- Start a simple student portfolio system that serves as a place to track writing growth and store papers for future revision and practice. For more on this, see Using Past Papers in the Collins Classroom.
- Most importantly, get students writing on day one! Click here for some great Type One prompts to start the year.
